The Emmy®-winning HBO series returns! Following Enoch "Nucky" Thompson (Steve Buscemi), Atlantic City's undisputed czar during Prohibition, Season 3 picks up 16 months after the shocking events of Season 2. With the Roaring '20s about to start, the economy is booming, but alcohol is scarce and competition is fierce, which can mean only one thing: blood will be spilled. SUNDAYS 10 PM/9C

New Orleans, 25 months later. Crime and corruption are up, culture is being trampled, and the people who matter—the workers, families and dreamers who still live here—have had it. The acclaimed HBO drama series set in post-Katrina New Orleans concludes its compelling third season as the city rises up to reclaim its unique cultural roots. Diminished by grief and loss, but fed up with the incompetence and graft among police and city officials, the various characters—musicians, chefs, and Mardi Gras Indians, among them—unite in the shadow of a murder prosecution and begin to make inroads in demanding that their music, art and well-being be protected. 'Twas the night before Christmas and at Harold's abode, a prize Christmas tree was in ashes, thanks to Kumar's phat bowl. Harold's family was all snug at midnight mass, so H & K knew they would have to act fast. So on a mission they went to find a new tree, causing havoc and mischief with everyone they would see. And they were heard to exclaim as they got high as a kite, "Holy #!%$, it's the ghost of Neil Patrick Harris, this sure is a great night!" "This film will stuff your stocking with profane, perverse, politically incorrect glee" (Minneapolis Star Tribune). John Cho, Kal Penn and Neil Patrick Harris star. (AC, GL, N, V) R-1:29.
